International Public Health/International Health P: Access Initiative: Worked to create new metrics to measure university policies based on access to medicines criteria, while presidential candidates adopted parts of UAEM policies. Catalyzed by UAEM the Universities of Washington and British Columbia adopted new policies incorporating humanitarian access principles. Yale University committed to ensure that a potential new HIV-AIDs treatment would be available at low cost in developing countries. Based on a petition filed by UAEM students, the WHO added a critical heart disease drug to its essential medicines list. Journals including JAMA and newspapers published significant papers by UAEM students on the role of universities in global health. Medical Specialties Research: Innovation Initiative: Participated in important WHO negotiations on ensuring the global medicines research agenda addresses the needs of those in developing countries. Policies UAEM encouraged negotiators to adopt were endorsed by African members of the WHO as well as the Netherlands and McGill University in their own submissions to WHO. Both Tri-I and Stanford medical schools adopted new curricula run by UAEM students focused on the university role in defeating diseases that primarily affect the developing world. UAEM students also began work on surveying neglected disease (ND) researchers to identify barriers to undertaking ND research and exploring novel mechanisms for funding ND research on university campuses. More than 300 student leaders from more than 50 campuses around the world who attended the 2007 UAEM Conference - twice as many than the previous year - left with a rigorous introduction to global health and intellectual property issues, as well as leadership and activism skills. The International Federation of Medical Students Association (IFMSA) and Medsin, the UK medical student association, endorsed UAEMs proposals and planted the seeds of change for UAEMs ideas to spread across the Atlantic (300 Attendees) Grants and Allocations: $0.00 This amount includes foreign grants: N/A	$55,281.00
